Some count their sorrows one by one, But never count their mercies; And grumble when their work is done, Yet strut with well-filled purses. And give such consequential airs, That one would think them solely The patentees of righteous prayers, To help the meek and lowly. Which breeds such bitter, rank disgust Within the godly liver, That hes inclined to think their trust Is not in God, the Giver. Still, if it is, they fall far short Of being thankful creatures; And simply make Gods mercies sport, To lengthen out their features. A ROYAL DIALOGUE. George III. --Curse it! a thousand times, I curse it! Prince Of Wales. --Curse what George III. --Why this d d farce of keeping up the Myths and fashions of the past--the marriage Of our tender ones to German snobs, this False alliance with confederate powers....
