Excerpt: . . . 11 and that undermined parents attempts to make informed decisions about their chil-drens exposure to violent content. In addition, the Commission found that adver-tisements for such products frequently failed to contain rating information. Finally, the Commission reported on the results of an undercover mystery shop by unaccompanied teens, aged 13-16, of retailers and movie theaters. The young shoppers were able to buy M-rated electronic games and parental advisory-labeled music re-cordings 85 of the time and purchase tickets for an R-rated movie almost half 9 (46) of the time. C. Findings of the Commissions Follow-Up Reports in 2001 In response to Congressional requests, the FTC released two follow-up Reports in 2001. Both Reports examined the entertainment industrys practices with regard to 10 marketing violent entertainment products to children. The April 2001 Report con-centrated primarily on advertising practices by the three industries on television, 11 in print media and on the Internet. For the December 2001 Report, the Commis-sion staff contacted several companies within each of the three industries and re-quested marketing documents concerning violent movies, music and electronic games. In addition, the Commission conducted a second mystery shopper survey, like the one from the September 2000 Report. Finally, the Commission staff contin-ued to monitor television, print and Internet advertising for placement and disclo-sure of rating and labeling information. These Reports noted progress by the movie and video game industries in pro-viding clear and conspicuous disclosure of rating information in advertising as well as new efforts by both industries to limit advertising for R-rated movies and M-rated games in popular teen media venues. The music industry demonstrated mixed progress. On the...
